Adverse effects of advanced maternal age on offspring kidney diseases are an intriguing concern. Current knowledge on this topic has been reviewed, and the recent literature was evaluated by analysis of keywords and review of citations. Maternal age affects the risk of kidney diseases in offspring, e.g., congenital anomalies of the kidney and urinary tract, renal agenesis/dysgenesis, renal disease in young adults, congenital nephrotic syndrome, obstructive uropathy, hypertension, renal tubular acidosis, cystic dysplasia, focal segmental glomerulosclerosis, nephropathia epidemica, diabetic nephropathy, polycystic kidney disease, and Alport syndrome. The mechanisms are probably multifaceted. As a response to aging the kidney may activate mechanisms of cellular senescence, triggering diseases in adult offspring.Q: What is an "equivalent divisor"? I was going through a paper in a database of equivalence classes and equivalent
