Cyparade Games Visual tracking of a target scene is performed in a variety of applications, such as surveillance applications and other image processing applications. The target scene is typically defined by a sequence of frames, with each frame depicting a snapshot of the scene. Each frame provides target scene information to a visual tracking system that tracks the target scene over time. For example, the visual tracking system may use the target scene information to detect and track a movement of an object in the target scene. FIG. 1 illustrates an exemplary method of detecting a movement of an object in a target scene. In this example, the object in the target scene is represented by a text string. As shown, each of the frames in the target scene depicts the object in the target scene at a different position. The visual tracking system analyzes the object position in each frame to determine a movement of the object over time. For example, the visual tracking system may use the position of the object in each frame to identify a boundary between frames. The visual tracking system may use the movement of the object to track the object, i.e., to determine an object trajectory. In practice, an object of interest in a target scene may be occluded, i.e., covered, by another object. For example, as shown in FIG. 1, the object may be covered by another text string. As a result, the position of the object in each frame may be different. Consequently, the movement of the object is indistinguishable from movement of a background object.²s + 42²s. 43²s Collect the terms in -15² + 8² + 5² + 21². 21² Collect the terms in -22 + 10 + 12 - 30²². -30²² Collect the terms in 7 - 5²² - 7. -5²² Collect the terms in
