I was trying to install phpunit/php-code-coverage and Composer from composer.json: "require": { "phpunit/php-code-coverage": "1.2.3", "composer/installers": "1.0.14" }, But the following warning occured: Warning: Missing argument 1 for composer\installers\composer-patches\composer-patches, class@2014-03-06 03:04:34 How can I install composer without sudo? A: If you are using Linux as your OS and your machine is not locked you can simply run: $ chmod +x composer-installer.sh $./composer-installer.sh If you have a problem with permissions, use: $ chmod +x composer-installer.sh $ sudo./composer-installer.sh or if you are using a BSD based OS: $ chmod +x composer-installer.sh $ sudo sh./composer-installer.sh Or you can use a web interface. In that case you do not need to write any code as all you need to do is to input the username and password (do not use the sudo command in this case). For example: A: Download composer-installer.sh script. $ wget Now run it as root: $ sudo./composer-installer.sh Q: DBTable adapter for MOSS DB with SQL like syntax I have created one DBTable in VS 2008 using wizard and it's a sub table in a site. Key issues and some of the more outrageous comments made by the oil and pipeline industry representatives – from former President George W. Bush and former ExxonMobil CEO Lee Raymond to Louisiana Governor Bobby Jindal, State Senator Mary Landrieu and oil industry advocates – were among the topics discussed by an EPA-led, industry-backed, two-day meeting in New Orleans that opened Thursday with a keynote address from former U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell. A diverse array of issues was on the table, including greenhouse gas emission caps, climate change mitigation and adaptation, and clean energy and efficiency. Hans Bruyninckx, director of the EPA's Office of Air and Radiation, opened Thursday's two-day, industry-hosted event with a discussion of two of the most contentious pipeline projects in the United States: the proposed Keystone XL pipeline and the Dakota Access Pipeline. The first project has drawn criticism and protests for the route it would follow in carrying oil from Alberta, Canada, to Texas refineries and export ports. Keystone XL, which the State Department rejected in November, would cut across the Ogallala Aquifer, a critical source of water for 19 states. The second project, which the Army Corps of Engineers has authorized the company behind it to construct in North Dakota, is largely on land that the Standing Rock Sioux tribe claims as sacred 2d92ce491b
