I am writing an app that uses the LocationManager.NETWORK_PROVIDER, but it would crash when the app is closed and reopened. I checked the source code of Android's LocationManager, and found that it will always return NO while the app is closed. Which means that the devices in Android 4.0+ are always connected to some cellular network while closed? A: AFAIK, NO. From what I got from a friend the only reason they connected to any 3G network would be there is no wired connection available. A: No. It can be turned off by the user. You have no way of knowing whether they chose to do that or not. The oil tanker, the Aral, is seen on dry land during the dry season in the town of Ordu, in the Black Sea
