VAASTAV: THE REALITY (1999) KALAKUTI Y.T. Apart from the fact that the movie is dubbed in Tamil, the movie â€¢â€¢ (Rs.01.50) is pretty much average â€¢â€¢.Osteoprotegerin receptors (OPG-R) are transmembrane proteins expressed in a variety of tissues including bone, brain, kidney and testis. OPG-R is a membrane-bound protein that forms a complex with RANK and RANKL to regulate osteoclast differentiation. OPG-R deletion and/or a mutated OPG-R1 gene are reported to be involved in osteoporosis in human and mice. OPG-R is a very good candidate for pharmaceutical development since high affinity peptides such as K52W and D156E could block this receptor to alleviate bone loss in osteoporosis in mice and rats. In the current grant cycle, we established that the soluble receptor, OPG, suppresses osteoclast differentiation by interacting with OPG-R and RANK- RANKL complexes on the cell surface. Importantly, we discovered that the soluble receptor, OPG, regulates OPG-R phosphorylation (or activation) in response to RANKL stimulation. We also discovered that inhibition of OPG-R dephosphorylation increases osteoclast differentiation. In particular, the OPG-R dephosphorylation is mediated by tyrosine phosphatase SHP-2 and we have now determined that SHP-2 is a dual specificity phosphatase that inactivates several receptor tyrosine kinases and non-receptor tyrosine kinases. Interestingly, OPG-R dephosphorylation is not mediated by Src family tyrosine kinase, members of the Src family. Therefore, we have formed the general hypothesis that the OPG-R dephosphorylation regulates osteoclast differentiation through SHP-2 activation. In order to test this hypothesis, we propose to investigate the following three specific aims: 1) To elucidate the molecular mechanism by which OPG dephosphorylates OPG-R by the identified tyrosine phosphatase SHP-2 2) To elucidate the molecular mechanism by which specific chemical inhibitors of SHP-2 increase osteoclast differentiation 3) To elucidate the molecular mechanisms by which the OPG-R D
