Bangkok, August 3, 2012 —A Cambodian journalist known for his use of social media was killed in a remote fishing village on the outskirts of Phnom Penh, according to local reports and local human rights groups.

Elnur Nary, director of the organization Khmer Journalists Association, told CPJ that news reports of the death of local journalist Chhum Sokha Khoy on August 2 are unconfirmed. He said local authorities have not provided any information regarding the circumstances of his death. “Our office in Phnom Penh has heard some rumors that he was killed by the police in Prey Veng province, on the south-eastern coast,” Nary said.

“The police haven’t released any statement on it. His family hasn’t heard any news about it.” In an August 2 communique, Khmer Journalists Association said Chhum Sokha Khoy was working for several newspapers and was known for his work on websites. The organization said it had received a call from police on August 2 indicating that authorities had found his body in the village of Kaong. Chhum Sokha Khoy had reportedly been detained by authorities and taken to Prey Veng's provincial police station, the organization said. Local human rights groups have said the circumstances of Chhum Sokha Khoy's death remain unclear and that authorities have not provided any information regarding the cause of his death.

The Committee to Protect Journalists is closely following the case and is concerned about the safety of journalists in Cambodia. We call on all Cambodian authorities to conduct thorough investigations into the circumstances of Chhum Sokha Khoy's death, to ensure that authorities take concrete action to prevent further violence against the press and that those responsible for any deaths are held accountable.

UPDATE: See CPJ's statement on the August 3 death of a prominent Cambodian journalist. US president-elect Donald Trump said it was "horrible" to see a former president "destroy his legacy" by deliberately trying to obstruct the criminal investigation into the Russia probe. It was "very, d0c515b9f4

(edited) I can see that the files are smaller in size, but I am unable to grab them. How can I fix this? I have tried renaming the.zip file and renaming the files in the zip, as well as changing their date. A: You should be able to use WinZip to extract the files from the.zip file. This is a batch (for windows) command that will:
-Extract to the folder that contains the zip file -Use 7-Zip -Parse the zip file -Remove all previous contents -Recreate a zip file with all the extracted files cd C:\KEYGEN-BEAT 7z x z.zip 7z e z.zip
